Posts Mead 0 Monday, October 11, 2010

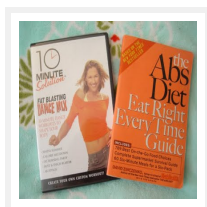

I once read before that what you were when you were 7 is what you're likely to turn out to be when you're a grownup. Looking back, the things I did during playtime and countless afternoons were activities I eventually made careers out of. If you're hitting some on-the-job roadblocks and feel like...

Seven Easy Ways to Stay Slim

Posts Mead 0 Wednesday, October 13, 2010

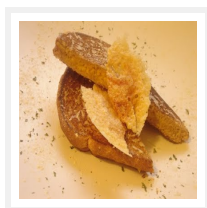

No pressure: Find an easy, breezy food and fitness combo that works for you. Ever since that year I'd uncannily gained 15 extra pounds (it took a year to shed them), I thought I'd completely resolved my body issues and have learned to be happy with what I weighed. Because when I did get fat, only then...

The Perfect Grilled Cheese Sandwich

Easy, cheesy goodness Over at my blog, NyMinuteNow.com, at least half of my posts are food-related. I can't help it: While I've never gone to chef school or anything fabulous like that (it's still a distant dream of mine to be able to attend the French Culinary Institute in New York City...on full scholarship),...

Hi, friends!

I started this blog picking up from the 30-day Blog Challenge I began at NyMinuteNow.com, based on the premise that "It takes 30 days to create a habit."

Working Happy: To Each Her Own

What's your work forecast? My college (and early work life) ex who remains a good friend once used to find it funny and amusing that I wanted to be a journalist...but only for happy news. We used to joke that, in the event I became a broadcaster, my segment would start like this: "And now, for the good..."

A Clutter-free Life

When I decided to finally move abroad, I had to tackle eight years' worth of belongings back at my old apartment. This included trinkets and mementos from high school, stacked notebooks from college, and paper calendars, photos, and cards collected over time. Not included here are shoes, clothes, handbags,...

I've accepted that I'm one of those people who experience things at a slower pace and learn via a more languid approach. I tend to take my time growing into things, and getting familiar with my situation and surroundings. It doesn't help that I'm slow to move in the morning. That's why I find it very...
